A MEMORIAL DESIGN PRESENTATION

Preface

Granite - Bronze/A Memorial Design Presentation

We hope this Design Book will increase your appreciation of fine memorialization in the Granite-Bronze concept and stimulate fresh, new insights into your choice of a memorial.

Many years ago vast granite deposits were discovered beneath the earth. This granite was discovered to be ideally suited for the manufacture of granite memorials. Due to the chemical structure of granite it could stand the test of time... The memorial industry grew from these plentiful deposits of granite. The stone is extracted from beneath the earth in many colors and then fashioned into various shapes and inscribed with beautiful ornamentation and appropriate inscription to stand as a tribute to the memory of your love one.

The world over, bronze, is attached to virtually every type of stone. However, granite, either polished or satin finished is the recommended setting for bronze, because of its extreme durability. Bronze is basically an alloy of copper and tin. Minute traces of other metals are added to improve both the flow qualities of the molten metal and yield desirable qualities in the finished castings.

Bronze is a valuable metal because it does not deteriorate. This is due to bronze's ability to form its own protective coating, or "patina". Depending on the environment, the natural patina can be a viridian green, reddish brown or dark charcoal gray and collectors of antique bronzes delight in the unique patinas of bronzes, appreciating that which only time can give. Because of its constituents, bronze tends to darken to charcoal gray highlighted with viridian green, a most pleasing combination with granite. However, to retain its factory patina of sparkling brown with burnished gold highlights, bronze is coated with a protective layer. Bronze can be re-lacquered or else maintained with periodic cleanings and waxings with any good auto wax. Or the bronze may be allowed to form its own protective patina as nature intended.

A memorial should reflect the time and place of its creation as well as the personalities it commemorates. Therefore, a cemetery becomes more than just a "final resting place" - it becomes a summary of individual lives, beliefs, aspirations and achievements; a chronicle of contemporary life and culture. This is why a cemetery is rightly a place for contemplating not only the past but also the present and future. This is why a cemetery is not only a place of bittersweet melancholy but also one of noble beauty; a place for hope as well as sorrow. This is why a cemetery is truly a place for remembrance, not oblivion.

Perhaps one of these designs will "speak" to you on an intensely personal level. Select a Granite-Bronze memorial . . . Beautiful, Appealing, Fitting.

The "Contempra" is permanently attached to the memorial by drilling four 1/4" dia. holes to a depth of 1", filling the holes with any good memorial epoxy, running a bead of epoxy around the underside of the rim and setting the entire assembly in place.

The plastic outer casing, which has a bottom opening to allow proper drainage, is set into the pre-drilled vase hole before epoxying the vase assembly into place.

To position vase, merely lift (1) and rotate (2) so that the locking lugs rest on the rim in either the demi-vase or full upright position.

The floral arranger (frog) may be removed by twisting to align the locking detents, which allows the vase liner to be removed.
